Tyrosine aminotransferase (TAT) activity of human brain, measured as amino-oxy-acetic acid-tyrosine formation from tyrosine, was 0.30 nmol.min<sup>-1</sup>.g<sup>-1</sup> wet tissue and about 2.0 times the levels in control liver tissues. The levels of TAT activity were highest at the level of the brain stem and thalamus followed by the other levels of the brain. In studies of the regional distribution of TAT in brain, TAT activity was highest in the cerebellum, and in the cerebral hemispheres and the cerebrum. Correlation studies showed a positive correlation between TAT activity and tyrosine, leucine, lysine, and ethanol, and a negative correlation between TAT activity and glucose. TAT activity was markedly increased in 23 cases of hepatic dysfunction. [Incidence and significance of pre-hospital electrocardiographic signs of myocardial ischemia].
